FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY

After a lacklustre August, September proved to be yet another disappointing month for domestic equities on the back of increasing geopolitical tensions globally as well as a threat of further lockdowns within a number of developed markets on the back of a surging Covid-19 second wave. When coupled with mounting tensions over the upcoming US presidential election and ongoing trade tensions with China, the backdrop was set for ongoing market volatility. This ultimately manifested itself in the domestic bourse swinging by some 4% intra-month to end notably in the red after a strong start to the month.

Despite a disappointing end to the penultimate quarter of the year, domestic equity markets remain quite a way off their lows of late in the first quarter as returns have been driven by strong multiple expansion ultimately bringing moves for the year to date period to flat notwithstanding the carnage witnessed within the economy. This was once again brought to the fore during September with the release of second quarter GDP growth numbers indicating a whopping 16.4% contraction in the economy from the first to the second quarter. While the pressure valve release for this deteriorating macroeconomic picture has predominantly been a vociferous weakening of the Rand, investors have begun to look through the horrific earnings updates issued by a number of local companies and started to price in an assessment of what the future may look like.

While this narrative began playing out in August already as a number of banks and domestic retailers re-rated materially unlocking some value, the pattern continued to a large extent into September. This was witnessed in stocks such as Bidvest, Shoprite, Truworths, Cashbuild, AVI and Motus- all of which released earnings updates during September. Once again while a number of these businesses (with the exception of Shoprite) reported significantly impaired operational performances over periods including the hard lockdown imposed on the domestic economy, results proved to be better than expected across the board with management teams indicating some improvement in trading conditions over the last 3 months (or second half period of the companies providing a 6 month update).
