FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY

Throughout the month, the global financial markets have been weaving their way through an intricate tapestry of geopolitical uncertainties, pivotal economic data, and the strategic directions undertaken by central banks. In the United States, the Federal Reserve's March Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting heralded a wave of optimism. The dovish tone struck by Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell not only reassured investors, but also hinted at a potential easing of interest rates in the latter part of the year. This, combined with the Fed's upward adjustment of the 2024 GDP growth forecast from 1.4% to 2.1%, injected a notable dose of confidence into the markets. Such optimism helped temper fears that the Federal Reserve might maintain a tight monetary policy, which could risk nudging the economy toward recession.

Domestically, from a monetary policy perspective, the South African Reserve Bank (SARB) maintained a cautious stance by keeping the repo rate unchanged at 8.25% during its second Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) meeting of the year. The continued increase in headline CPI inflation remains a point of concern, prompting the MPC to keep a close eye on inflationary pressures. The market had largely anticipated the decision to maintain rates, placing greater emphasis on the SARB's tone for hints at future policy direction. Given the current rate levels, the policy stance is deemed restrictive, aligning with the broader inflation outlook and the imperative to mitigate elevated inflation expectations. Consequently, any prospective rate cuts by the SARB's MPC are anticipated to be cautiously considered (possibly materializing towards the end of 2024) and will be contingent on the domestic and international inflation landscape and the evolution of global interest rate trends as the year unfolds.

A higher TER ratio does not necessarily imply a poor return, nor does a low TER ratio imply a good return. The current TER ratio cannot be regarded as an indication of future TER ratios.
