FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY

September ushered in a significant shift in the financial landscape, as the much-anticipated interest rate adjustments took centre stage in the US. The Federal Reserve made its move by cutting rates by 50 basis points, bringing them down to the 4.75-5.0% range. However, this might not be the end of the story, with meetings still scheduled for November and December. Chairman Jerome Powell and his team have indicated that future rate adjustments are likely to be more modest, with 25 basis points expected at a time. Yet, the market remains hopeful that the Fed could opt for more substantial cuts, especially as the job market shows signs of softening. Looking further ahead, expectations are that rates will settle into the low 3% range by 2025.

Across the pond, The People's Bank of China (PBOC) introduced several measures to stimulate growth. First, it reduced the reserve requirement ratio by 50 basis points for most banks, marking the second such cut this year. This was followed by a 20-basis points reduction in the seven-day reverse repo rate, lowering it to 1.5%. Additionally, the PBOC decreased the medium-term lending facility rate by 30 basis points to 2%—the most significant cut since the facility was introduced in 2016. To further support the property market, the PBOC also reduced rates on existing home mortgages and cut the down payment requirement for second-home purchases from 25% to 15%. These combined measures are aimed at reinvigorating China's economy.

The impact of these moves was evident in the markets. The Shanghai Composite Index surged by +21.4% in the last week of the month, closing September up by +17.4% (YTD: +12.2%). The CSI 300 also posted impressive gains, rising +21.4% in the final week (YTD: +20.0%), marking its most significant weekly jump since the stimulus measures during the 2008 financial crisis. In the US, the anticipation of lower borrowing costs buoyed the S&P 500, which increased by +2.1% for the month (YTD: +22.1%).
